There was a lively time in the court when Mrs. Hodgson took the stand to give evidence in the case, which was not concluded taking all day. Mrs. Henry Hodgson, the next door neighbor, the defendant, and Mrs. E. H. Christison, the woman who brought the action, were in the courtroom for damages against Mrs. Christison alleging that the water from her garden had purposely been permitted to flow over the next door garden to damage the property and to get onions and vegetables and into the cellar of the house occupied by Mrs. Christison.

There was a lively time in the court when Mrs. Hodgson took the stand to give evidence in the case, which was not concluded taking all day. Mrs. Hodgson stated beside his legal adviser tried to get the water to run over the garden and things became mixed up. The court erred in restoring order when the water was permitted to run over the garden.

Building inspector McKeown was called out to see what had been done to the garden. He had seen a red flag running from the eaves of the Christison house. It was tilted up on one side so that the water would run down over the garden and run over the garden.

Mr. Hodgson stated that in January he had the back part of the garden was covered with water. He had seen a red flag running from the eaves of the Christison's house.

At Grace Methodist church on Sunday morning Rev. W. M. Rochester, pastor of the church, spoke on some phases of the work throughout Canada and in the evening gave a short talk on the importance for the religious work of the Y.M.C.A. in Western Canada, told of the extension of this branch of the Christian church between Port Arthur and the Coast.
